Poor Indoor Air Quality can be Harmful to your Guests

According to the Asthma and Allergy Foundation, one in five people in the United States have allergy or asthma symptoms. One night in a hotel room can lead to swollen eyes, a clogged nose, and a scratchy throat, which are symptoms that tend to dampen the traveling experience. These symptoms are further aggravated by the unhealthy particles and odors trapped in dirty indoor air.

Polluted air not only lowers the visit quality for your guests, it also affects the health and working satisfaction of your employees. The Lahey Clinic states that dust mites and molds can live in the carpet, bedding, and upholstered furniture in a hotel room. These pollutants are linked to the common cold, allergy and asthma attacks and sinus infections. Adequate ventilation and superior air filtration will assure you that the air in your facility is clean and fresh.

Guests Value Hotel Cleanliness

According to a survey from HotelManagement.net, Americans rank cleanliness as the most important factor in selecting a hotel. For those who suffer with allergies, staying away from home can be far from the relaxing experience that it should be. If a hotel room is not as clean as expected, guests are less likely to return.
